You walk into a vegetarian restaurant, look at the menu, and order a plant-based beef burger. Nothing on the menu shows its ingredients, and you only know the main ingredient is soybean.

People become vegetarian for many reasons—some for health, others for the environment while still others for religion. For those of us who just want to eat meat plant-based meat might be the best option because it looks, feels and even tastes like the real thing. While plant-based meat contains no animal products whatsoever lab-grown meat, or clean meat, is a different story. It is "grown" from animal cells in a clean lab. In other words, it is actual meat but you don't need to kill any animals.

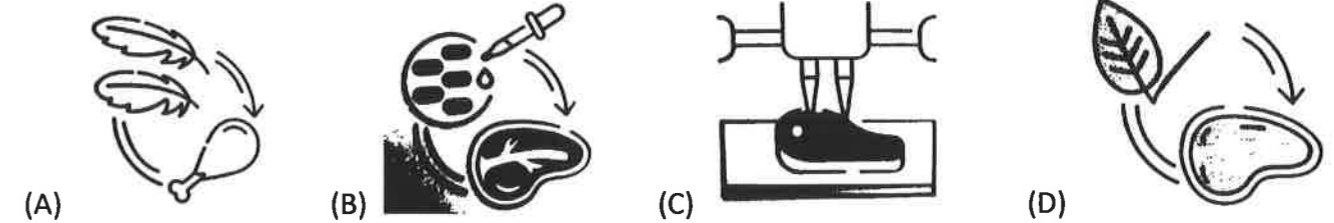

Most people would eat plant-based meat but would anyone want to eat meat grown in a lab? But having said that if you could be fooled into thinking what you're eating is a delicious, juicy beef burger; do you ever need to eat a "real" burger?

Sniffer Dogs

To find out all dangerous items that are not allowed to be brought into Australia, the Australian government trains many dogs to help them find out these things in their international airports. These dogs are called airport detector dogs. Every day they work with the airport police to help them sniff out the items that may have a risk to Australia, for example, pests and disease located on items such as fruits, vegetables, seeds, and nuts. Once the detector dogs sniff the dangerous items, they will give the police a sign, "SIT," to tell the police to open the package and check out everything in it. A dog's nose is better than a human's because its nose is longer and wider than a human's. Besides, it has 20~40 times more olfactory receptors in its nose than a human, so it can easily sniff out every dangerous item. A detection dog needs to be trained for two to four months. During the time, it is trained to sniff many types of substances every day, and it has to distinguish which are the prohibited objects and give a sign right beside them quickly. Even when they begin to work, they still have to take the whole training again and again to keep their skills staying sharp.
