Amber's social studies teacher wanted the class to collect something special about human rights and share it with the whole class. Then she found a poster about human rights on the website. Although some words were difficult for her, she did not need to look them up in the dictionary. She could guess the meanings by looking at the pictures on the poster. For example, in picture 2, there are two people holding hands with each other. It means that we have the right to get married. With pictures, it is easy for students to understand human rights. Another special example is picture 5. It means that we have a right to gather peacefully. When she talked to all her classmates about this picture, one of her classmates, Tina, pointed out how important it is to get along with friends, family, and others.
